

MINDY: And are you...writing down what we say?

HERBERT: Yes. Yes I am.

MINDY: Why? Who are you.

HERBERT: Herbert Stenz. Since the internet is down, Google and Facebook have asked me to come down here and record everything you're saying. Google and Facebook make a lot of money sharing your information to advertisers and they don't want a dip in revenue while your town's internet is...not working.

CARLA: Well I'm not okay with this! You can't just...impede on my civil liberties like this.

HERBERT: Well you were fine with it before. Here, I'll drop off your mail for you and we'll call it a trade. Also, Civil Liberties by Lauri Friedman is available on Amazon. Free shipping with Amazon prime.

(HERBERT hands them a coupon.)

MINDY: Stop that! We don't want coupons we just want our privacy.

CARLA: Well, actually I heard that book is supposed to be great, so I will take the one about Civil Liberties, but otherwise...yeah. Stop!

MINDY: And who are you?!

STAN: (Deadpan, sinister:) Me? Don't worry about me.

MINDY: Are you writing down everything we say, too?

STAN: Yes.

MINDY: Well that worries me! Why are you doing that?

STAN: The NSA records everything you say or write online or on your phone...all the time. But there's no need to be alarmed as long as you're not a terrorist. Which you're clearly not. Although...you did leave your bag on the chair when you went to pick up your coffees. Which doesn't make you a terrorist...per se... but does put you on a list for suspicious behavior. Which I will need to put in my report.

CARLA: What?! Don't put that in your report!
